In their reviews of the Senate action a number of columnists and correspondents have noted that without Johnson the Doctrine might have died a lingering death by indifference. But the tall tactician from Texas moved in, as is his wont, at precisely the propitious moment.

FIRST THE SENATE committees had to put their thumbs on the Mideast resolution, the way a race track trainer does when he sends a sure thing to the Then the Senate itself had to satisify its dignity and do its nonest duty by debate. There is in this process a certain instant-an interval between debate and dilly-dally — which is pregnant with possibility.

Lyndon Johnson recognizes that moment by the same internal clock which tells Eddie Arcaro when to make his move to the front end of a horse race.

This sense of timing is some thing a master parliamentarian can't do without, but there is another intuitive skill which he must possess. Call it the manly of moving mountains. Senate rule and traditions of unlimited debate always appeal to the voluble streak in some of its

Last summer at the Democratic Convention in Chicago, I got the hunch, a misleading one as it turned out, that the Convention might have an inspiration and nominate Lyndon Johnson for one of the top positions. In an effort to re search the yarn in advance and to find out what really made Johnson click. I called on the Senator's mother, a queenly lady of 75, and put the question to her.

MRS. REBEKAH, JOHNSON thought for a moment and then referred me to some dialogue in Sir James Barrie's play, What Every Woman Knows. Mrs. Johnson has the wisdom and serenity of a born aristrocrat. She did not think it immodest to tell what to her was the plain truth about her famous son. The Barrie passage goes like this:

Alick: What is charm exactly, Maggie?

Maggie: Oh. it's - It's a sort of bloom on a woman. If you have it, you don't need to have anything else; and if you don't have it, it doesn't much matter what else you have. Some the few, have charm for all; and most have charm for one. But some have charm for none.

WELL. THE LAUDATIONS about Senator Johnson's political management are flying high in town, and a good deal of solemn analysis is going the rounds. But if you re-sex the Barrie passage, I think you have it all in a rather small space. Johnson's got charm -"a sort of bloom on a man" and he's got it on both sides of the Senate aisle as well as on the premises of the White House

The 85th Congress is still relatively young, with most of its important business ahead of it. There is the possibility of the Senate's turning Republican when Texas votes next month for a new Senate or when somebody drops dead (as somebody always does) in the heat of fray.

BUT IT'S DOUBTFUL if nose-count of nominal Democrats and Republicans has much sigificance any more. The political hyphen has broken the party There are Democrats and Social-Democrats and Demo-Laborites in the Senate. Among the Republicans there are Guardsmen, moderates, moderns and mayericks.

The only expression that will come from the Senate is its "sense" as to the rightness of the neasures which the Eisenhower Administration is sending up for action. And it takes considerable skill to extract this "sense" from the conglomeration of agitated mentalities which compose the upper house.

MANY QUESTIONS hang in the air as the Easter vacation of Congress approaches. Will the Senate, after all these years, come to a vote on a Federalized force bill on civil rights? Will the Senate expose of Labor racketeering lead to punitive laws against the Labor movement it-

Will the Senate—and to what extent? — use its authority as the Founding Fathers intended to check the spending proclivities of the House? Will we, under the first Republican President in a long while—and maybe the last while longer-get the billowing Budget back under con-

Pass the Brush

In most times and climes, the way of the artist is as tough as that of the transgressor. So I suppose it is only natural that the art world should be in a state of confusion and shock over Betsy, a refined and cultured chimpanzee-at the Baltimore zoo that has become a notable abstract or non-representational artist.

Several of Betsy's canvasses have already been sold to discriminating collectors for as much as $50 each, which is, alas, more than Gaugin or Van Gogh or Rousseau (Henri) received for their early pictures.

BUT IF SALVADOR Dali can prosper by standing back from a canvas and shooting it full of paint from a loaded harquebus, hen it seems sheer snobbery to bar Betsy from hanging her art in current exhibitions because she paints with her fingers, tongue, elbows and feet.

(A harquebus, if you don't do crossword puzzles, is an ancient species of musket or military flit-gun that poured lead into the enemy, if he weren't too far

Dali returned from Europe a few months ago, praising the harquebus as the equal of any sable brush extant in the execu tion - and that word is used advisedly - of art.

TRUE, DALI IS a surrealist in the art world, and Betsy is the disciple of another school, the on-representational or what-ne-hell-is-it school. (I am only quoting the head of Clan Robb, who is a Sunday painter.)

But if the late Jackson Pollock, a leader of the American school, could put his canvas on the floor, throw paint at it and let the trickles (of paint) flow wherever they would, what's the matter with Betsy's technique?

ed form of art these days. Betsy goes a step beyond uses her toes, tongue and elbows. try to get her barred from the National Academy?

IF BETSY SCORNS the con ventional pallette knife and brush, so do innumerable other modern artists. William Thon is apt to grab any instrument handy in the kitchen when he is in a creative mood - dish towel, sponge mop or spatula; it's all the same to this widely-acclaimed artist. The needle, old-fashioned instrument with which old-fashioned wives once darned sox, is one of Thon's favorite painting tools.

The art world, always regarded as the ultimate in camaraderie and democracy, is displaying snobbery in not welcoming Betsy, a sensitive chimp. Her canvases are rapidly becoming col-lectors' items. If the Modern Museum does not at once ar range a one-woman show of Bet sy's work, we art lovers put it down to unworthy prejudice and spite.

LIKE ALL ARTISTS, Betsy has a lofty goal. She needs $600 to enable the Baltimore Zoo to her a mate. Smart artists will quickly grasp the idea that if Betsy sells enough canvases, she may be too busy or absorbed in matrimony in the future to of fer them further competition in art.

There is no doubt that a national furor followed the zoo announcement of Betsy's venture non-respresentational art, with its clear and present indication that heretofore this field had been monopolized by humans. Until this announcement, most folks thought chimps had been responsible all along.

Assemblyman Frank Bonelli, of Hunt-

His "crime" comic book bill of the 1955 session was wisely vetoed by Gov. Knight. Now, in 1957, he has introduced a new one.

There has been little or no agitation or worry about comic books recently and we had supposed the objectionable one's had been pretty well cleaned up at the source—the publication company.

But "crime" still bothers Bonelli, and he seeks to make it a misdemeanor to sell or circulate such books to persons under 18.

But, as with all censors, Bonelli runs afoul of the pitfalls of definition. Under his bill, as with all others, "Treasure Island, "Huckleberry Finn," and much of Shakespeare, not to mention a thousand other classical fictional works, could be banned.

Aside from the fact that a 17 year old would find no strain in borrowing all the "banned" comics he yearned to devour from any 18-year-old, there are countless other fallacies when one meddles legislatively in such matters.

The obviously worse one is that if such censorship bills are adopted, where do we stop? If Bonelli regards crime comic books as a menace, the next legislator may regard the mere reporting of crime news as equally a threat to the mores and morals of us all. What then? Do we ban such reports, and live in a never-never land?

If the legislature falls for such folly, it can be assumed Gov. Knight will show the same good judgment as he did two years ago and veto the measure.

Ho-hum. This is where we came in.

turned to Russia. Some eleven or twelve million Germans from the Eastern part of that country were thrust starving and freezing into West Germany. A large number of people in the Baltic countries were resettled or liquidated in various parts of Russia. Half a million Finns were refugees from the part of their country annexed by Russia at the close of the Finnish War.

About nine hundred thousand Palestinian Arabs fled from the incoming Israelis. Something like seven hundred thousand Chinese refugees are living on the island of Hong Kong. Twelve million or more people were exchanged between Pakistan and India. No one knows how many, but certainly large numbers of North Koreans fled into the Southern part of that country and scores of thousands of North Vietnamese were evacuated to South Vietnam. No one knows how many Poles were uprooted when Russia annexed a considerable part of that country, and no one knows how many Russians have been moved from place to place in that sprawling empire. Some two million Chinese are refugees in Formosa. The latest large scale movement of uprooted people has been about 160,000 Hungarians who fled to Austria. This movement continues as does that of Germans from the East to the West. It is important to note that, with the exception of India and Pakistan where the difficulity was mainly one of religion, the refugees, as distinguished from deportees mentioned herein, have come from strongly centralized, tyrannical states and sought refuge in places having more limited government and greater freedom from tyranny.

People do not flee from self government and freedom, and such countries do not thrust out large segments of their

Anniversary Waltz' Next Production

"Anniversary Waltz," comedy by Jerome Chodorov and Joseph Fields, will be presented by Herb Rogers at his Palm Springs Playhouse, opening Tuesday evening March 26, at 8:30 o'clock, follow ing the engagement of "Goodbye, My Fancy," which will end on Sunday evening, March 24. Heading the cast of the production will be Phyllis Flax, John Crawford, Marrian Walters, Tim O'Connor Michael Ferrall, Sidney Breese

"Anniversary Waltz" concerns a happy husband who, on his 15th wedding anniversary, announces to his in-laws that he romanced their daughter before they were legally bound. The reaction to announcement is explosive and the payoff occurs when their 13-year-old daughter goes on the radio to reveal the illicit relationship to an audience of seven mil-
